

How to Tell If a Candidate Has a Serious Climate Plan

DAVID M. HART | JUNE 2019

As David Hart writes for InsideSources, any serious climate plan should leverage American strengths to enable global action, cover all sectors that produce emission, embrace a broad and growing portfolio of potential solutions, and be built to last.

Voters care about climate change. While caring about climate is a good start, it's not enough. Voters need to be able to choose candidates whose climate plans will actually make a difference. As David Hart writes for InsideSources, any serious climate plan should leverage American strengths to enable global action, cover all sectors that produce emission, embrace a broad and growing portfolio of potential solutions, and be built to last.
